

The Elf Colored the Rainbow

By Jeffrie Wang

Age 7

In the land of beyond, there is a kingdom of elves. One day after one heavy rainfall had stopped, the king elf came out from his castle and took a walk in the garden on one of the clouds. In the distance of the sky, he saw the gray rainbow that he did not like for he likes everything in colors. After his walk, he sent out an order to his council to make the rainbow more colorful. His council posted up the kings' order and gathered all the painters in the kingdom to come to the castle. At the meeting, the king tells the painters they need to paint the gray rainbow with the colors of red, orange, green, yellow, and blue.

To get the colors, they have to search through out the kingdom and even go to earth to find the finest colors. They got the red from the flowers, the orange from oranges, the green from the grass, the yellow from the sunlight, and the blue from the rivers. After the rainbow became colorful, the king slid down and putted a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow as contribution to beautify the rainbow. The elf king smiled and walked proudly back to his castle. From then on, after each rainfall, the colorful rainbow always shows up in the sky.
